

INSIDE/ OUTSIDE

My work investigates the tension between the intimate interior of the body and the surface we show to the world. Using knitting as a primary technique, I translate microscopic bodily structures into enlarged, tactile forms that appear to shift, stretch, and respond. By doing so, I want to create a moment where the viewer becomes aware of their own internal landscape—something intimate yet unfamiliar. Rather than presenting the body directly, the work allows fragments to exist on their own, inviting a sensorial experience that moves between attraction and unease.
