

THE VERY BERRY PAVILION

The Very Berry Pavilion, a place to remember what used to be a bountiful activity; The plucking of berries out in the wild—and in this specific version of the pavilion—blackberries.

The blackberry education serves as a hub for sharing the knowledge required to pick and process the berries. Many kids, and even adults, are not aware that food is all around us, and how to safely prepare that food. Besides being edible, blackberries have many other properties that will be explored in our workshops, like making dye or a body-scrub!

The pluktuin (translated as "picking garden") is a monitored area for the blackberries to be grown and picked. Blackberries do not require much maintenance, they grow easily, especially with the specialised structure they grow around. However, the foraging of berries in public forests is still illegal in many places, and counts towards poaching. So a designated area has been appointed that the Staatsbosbeheer is aware of.

Will the Blackberry Education question you on the origin of the berries? Only if it is your first time! We need to make sure the berries have been picked safely, and only after we taught you how to do that, will we allow self-brought berries.

Want to explore other berries? Be on the look out for our Strawberry and Raspberry Educations!
